

The Telegraph 31 August 2008

◀ Kamal Chakraborty, a former employee of Telco, was driven by a green dream. He would travel over 60km on his two-wheeler, from Jamshedpur to Dangorjuri, every weekend to plant trees. The place is now a man-made forest with over 2 lakh trees. Along the way, Chakraborty chucked his job and settled in Dangorjuri. There he was joined by Jayati, who too gave up a corporate life and came to Dangorjuri. They now run the Bhalopahar School in Dangorjuri, Purulia, teaching 150 Santhal children, providing midday meals and arranging for health camps. No wonder they won the Patton Award for a School That Cares.